Last term, our school started a wonderful project: planting a garden between the two buildings. At first, the place was full of rubbish and broken chairs, and no one wanted to go there. Our teacher, Mr. Tamer, asked us to work in groups. My group decided to clean the place and plant flowers and small trees. We worked every Thursday for two months. Some students brought plants from home, some painted the old chairs, and some made a small library under a big tree. The work was hard, especially in the hot sun, but we never felt tired because we loved what we were doing. The director visited the garden and said, "You have changed this place into a piece of art." I felt very proud that day.
